Campaign signs remind voters of an upcoming election and build name recognition and support. They can also be a potential safety hazard for campaign workers, volunteers and the public. Signs are strategically installed at busy intersections - precisely the locations where multiple utilities such as gas pipelines, water, sewer, electric, and telecommunications lines are buried.

Striking one of these utilities while pounding metal T-posts or rebar into the ground can put campaign workers, volunteers and the public in danger of serious injury, interrupt vital services in a community full of voters - and potentially create headlines no campaign wants.

Arizona 811 has now made the process of having underground utilities located and marked prior to political sign installation easier than ever for those seeking to take a solemn oath to protect and serve the public -- candidates for elected office -- and campaigns advocating for or against ballot measures.

Demonstate your commitment to preventing serious injuries and protecting the buried infrastructure we all rely on every day:

- ✓ Take the Arizona 811 Pledge of Safety at www.Arizona811.com/PoliticalSigns.
- ✓ Compile a list of all intersections/corners where all political signs will be installed.
- ✓ Submit the identified list of political sign locations as far as possible, but not less than two full working days, in advance of sign installation, at: www.Arizona.com/PoliticalSigns.
- ✓ Review confirmation information returned from Arizona 811 identifying all underground utility owners/operators who have marked their utilities.
- ✓ Safely install sign posts at least 24 inches from any mark on the ground to avoid striking a buried utility.
- ✓ Get public recognition and tell voters that your campaign is part of an important effort to protect the public and our community!
